HISTORICAL NOTE

Founded by artist Holly Ewald (1954-), UPP Arts was a Providence-based nonprofit organization that engaged a revolving group of volunteer artists, scientists, educators, students, and concerned citizens to build stewardship for Providence's urban ponds. Formerly known as the Mashapaug Pond Procession (2008-2009) and the Urban Pond Procession (2010-2014), UPP Arts focused its activities on Mashapaug Pond and its surrounding neighborhoods. Ewald, a visual artist who blends studio work in collage, bookmaking, printing, and painting with community engagement, has been recognized with awards from the Rhode Island Council on the Humanities, the Tomaquag Museum, Save the Bay, and the Rhode Island Historical Preservation and Heritage Commission. From 2014-2018, she served as a Community Fellow at the John Nicholas Brown Center for Public Humanities and Cultural Heritage at Brown University.

UPP Arts' roots can be traced to 2007, when residents living near Mashapaug Pond contacted the Rhode Island Department of Health with concerns that non-English speakers could not read the existing warning signs posted around the pond. The Rhode Island State Council on the Arts approached Ewald to design new multilingual signs that would alert visitors to the site's health and safety hazards. This early project connected Ewald with local schools, community members, and artists. Together, they planned the first pond procession in June 2008. This event simultaneously celebrated Providence's largest natural pond and raised awareness of its environmental precariousness. The Urban Pond Procession became UPP Arts' signature public event, held each spring until 2017.

Following the sign project and first procession, Ewald continued to collaborate with residents, artists, and schools, as well as with organizations like the Environmental Justice League of Rhode Island, the Tomaquag Museum, and Brown University's program in Public Humanities. What began as an individual artist's project grew into a grassroots nonprofit organization, with Ewald serving as its Executive Director and central facilitator. Dedicated to place-based education, UPP Arts recruited artists to design projects for students at local schools; by 2017, the group had partnered with 13 different schools and after-school programs in Providence and Cranston, engaging more than 35 teachers, 20 teaching artists, and nearly 1,000 students to create 24 unique projects. UPP Arts similarly expanded its public programming beyond the annual procession to include film screenings, artist residencies, and an orchard. UPP Arts established a formal board in 2014 and was granted 501(c)(3) status in December of that year. 2016-2017 marked the group's 10th year of programming and community engagement, and the final Urban Pond Procession, held on May 13, 2017, celebrated the indigenous, industrial, socioeconomic, and environmental histories of Mashapaug Pond. In June 2017, the organization's focus shifted to documenting these stories for the public and gifting its programs to partner organizations.

SCOPE AND CONTENTS OF THE COLLECTION

This collection documents the artistic, administrative, and educational activities of UPP Arts. The materials in this collection reflect a decade of interdisciplinary collaborations between artists, educators, students, and community members who used place-based art to celebrate and build awareness for Providence's urban ponds. Their work focused particularly on Mashapaug Pond and its environs, which include the site of the Gorham Manufacturing Company and the former West Elmwood neighborhood.

While much of the material in this collection was created by UPP Arts' founder and Executive Director Holly Ewald, the collaborative nature of UPP Arts means that it represents the work of many different artists and contributors. UPP Arts engaged artists and communities in public art-making through programs like educational prop- and costume-making workshops, film screenings, and the yearly Procession. These activities are represented in the collection through digital photographs and videos; teaching proposals and lesson plans; and artistic works.

The collection also traces the grassroots development and evolution of UPP Arts, from its origins in an individual artist project into a nonprofit organization with strong ties to schools, government agencies, and Brown University.

The educational resources in this collection derive from UPP Arts' work with primary, middle, and high schools; its connections to local environmental advocates; and its partnership with the John Nicholas Brown Center for Public Humanities and Cultural Heritage at Brown University. The collection gathers primary and secondary sources that inform what UPP Arts has termed the "four stories" of Mashapaug Pond: its history as a natural resource for Rhode Island's indigenous populations; its value to industrial production, evidenced in the operations of the Gorham Manufacturing Company; the socioeconomic history of the pond's adjacent neighborhoods and the City of Providence's urban redevelopment efforts of the 1960s; and the environmental impacts, both historical and current, on the pond and its surroundings.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COLLECTION

This collection is arranged into five series, four of which have been further arranged into subseries. Within these series and subseries, materials have been arranged chronologically according to the way UPP Arts maintained its records.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION OF THE COLLECTION

Series 1: Arts Programming, 2007-2018

Series 1 contains materials from UPP Arts' creative projects, which include workshops that Holly Ewald and other teaching artists led in local schools; workshops, benefit concerts, and film screenings offered to the public; and the annual Urban Pond Procession. Documents include proposals and class materials from teaching artists as well as work done by their students, such as drawings, questionnaires, and video projects. The series contains drawings and silkscreened signs by students in Ewald and Andrew Oesch's first workshops at Charles Fortes Elementary School; these served as the inspiration for new signs that Ewald designed for Mashapaug Pond in 2008-2009. Other represented projects include the design of a new playspace at Reservoir Avenue Elementary School; a ceramic timeline mural about the history of the Gorham site at Alvarez High School; and a floating sculpture designed by Sophia Academy students. This series also contains material from a workshop series and book Ewald completed in conjunction with the Tomaquag Museum, featuring collage work by members of the Narragansett community. Materials relating to the yearly processions include meeting notes and logistics, props, costumes, and publicity. The processions and other events are also well documented in digital photographs, mostly taken by Ewald (exceptions have been noted). This series has been divided into subseries that correspond to UPP Arts' different programming years, which generally began in the fall and culminated with the procession held the following spring. Starting in 2011, the organization adopted explicit themes that informed its activities for the year.

Series 2: Administrative Files, 2008-2018

Series 2 contains administrative records that trace UPP Arts' organic development from an artistic project into a nonprofit organization that represented a network of artists, residents, environmentalists, and scholars. Subseries 1 contains meeting agendas and minutes; financial records and fundraising appeals; reflections by Ewald and teaching artists on the year's activities; and materials from the UPP Arts board, which include discussions of the organization's values and the development of its 2016 mission statement. Subseries 2 collects materials from grants that funded various UPP Arts projects. Most files contain completed applications and final grant reports, though some unfunded and unsubmitted proposals are also present. Of particular note are the materials from the Organizational Development Grant received from the Rhode Island Foundation in 2012. This grant allowed UPP Arts to work with consultant to develop a strategic plan; files from this award include fundraising case statements and discussions of the organization's identity and goals. While notes and other writings by Holly Ewald appear throughout the collection, Subseries 3 collects some of her personal files, as well as an oral history of Ewald conducted by Anne Valk.

Series 3: Education and Research, 1956-2017

Series 3, Education and Research, includes materials created by UPP Arts for classroom use as well as published and unpublished resources created by others and given to UPP Arts. Its subseries reflect the four themes of UPP Arts' programming: indigenous history, industrial history, socioeconomic history, and environmental concerns. Subseries 4, Environment, compiles minutes of stakeholder meetings and other documents relating to the remediation of the former site of the Gorham Manufacturing Company. Subseries 5 collects historical research on Mashapaug Pond and its surrounding neighborhoods; it includes a large set of maps. A final subseries documents the formal workshops that UPP Arts offered to teaching artists and other educators starting in 2012, usually at the beginning of each programming year. For most years, the resource packets UPP Arts assembled for educators have been kept within their relevant thematic subseries. However, the final retrospective packet for 2017's theme, "Four Stories," is included in the last subseries. Additional educational resources can be found in Series 4.

Series 4: Brown University Collaboration, 2010-2017

Series 4 documents several aspects of UPP Arts' relationship with Brown University. The majority of materials relate to "Oral History and Community Memory," a Public Humanities course co-taught by Anne Valk and Holly Ewald in fall 2011, spring 2013, and spring 2014. Documents from this course include notebooks and digital teaching files from both Valk and Ewald; large pages of class notes; research papers and articles; and materials from the exhibits, websites, and audio tours designed by their students. In addition to work from the oral history course, this series includes materials from several other projects completed by Brown University students and some documents relating to Brown's Superfund Research Program, which partnered with UPP Arts and other local organizations to address environmental health and remediation concerns in Rhode Island.

Series 5: Outreach and Impact, circa 1935-2018

Series 5, Outreach and Impact, is further divided into three subseries. Subseries 1, Publicity, includes digital newsletters; examples of promotional materials like the UPP calendar, created from 2012-2014; and the contents of a “scrapbook” binder maintained by UPP Arts, which collects event fliers, press releases, and newspaper clippings. The second series contains slideshows and other materials from presentations Ewald made to outside groups. A final subseries collects materials relevant to, and in some cases inspired by, the work of UPP Arts. In particular, several former residents of West Elmwood have contributed written memories and other primary sources that document life in the neighborhood in the early-to-mid 20th century.
